McFarland Cascade receives industry honor
WBMA names company 'Supplier of the Year'

Tacoma, Wash.—McFarland Cascade, the wood products company headquartered in Tacoma, recently added another honor to its achievements this year.

At its 105th Annual Convention and Building Products Showcase, the Western Building Material Association (WBMA) named McFarland Cascade its Supplier of the Year. The meeting was held Nov. 12-14 in Seattle.

McFarland received the award for its active participation in and support of the WBMA, a trade association serving the building materials industry with 460 members from Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon and Washington. WBMA officials presented the award at its President's Banquet on Nov. 13. McFarland is the tenth Supplier of the Year to be recognized since the award was established in 1999.

"McFarland Cascade was selected for their support of association of activities, commitment to sustainable business practices and their efforts to bring environmentally conscious products to the marketplace," said Casey Voorhees, executive director of WBMA.

The company has been a member of WBMA since 1979 and has been a regular sponsor and participant in the organization's annual convention. McFarland's Sales Manager, Phil Schumock, serves on WBMA's Suppliers' Council and Inside Sales Representative Melissa Page is a member of the Board of Trustees for the Young Westerners' Club.

In September, Professional Remodeling Magazine named McFarland Cascade's Terratec Naturals™ one of its 50 Most Innovative New Products of the year. Terratec was one of only 24 exterior products to be recognized.

The company distributes its products to Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Utah, Montana, Northern California, Alaska and Hawaii.
